and contribute to successful treatment, and this type of information is often difficult to find. Anticonvulsant medications are discussed in depth, and I am sure that this information will be very useful to practising pharmacists.

The final section covers the psychosocial aspects of epilepsy. The way in which this information is presented may help the reader to gain an appreciation for some of the challenges faced by children and families living with epilepsy.

There have been many advances in the understanding and treatment of epilepsy in recent years. This book will be an essential reference for pharmacists caring for children with seizures and epilepsy. I highly recommended this book to any health care practitioner who participates in the care of infants and children with epilepsy.

Aleksandra Bjelajac Mejia, BPharm, PharmD, RPh
Department of Pharmacy
Hospital for Sick Children
Toronto, Ontario

Emergency Management of Infectious Diseases

Emergency Management of Infectious Diseases offers a concise overview of a wide spectrum of infectious diseases. Pharmacists in general practice will appreciate its abridged coverage of this topic. Most of the clinical chapters are short (2–5 pages) and pragmatic. Remarkably, the chapter on infective endocarditis accurately distills the information to just 4 pages, a welcome relief compared with the complicated guidelines that exist. Major sections of the book include Systems, Pediatrics, Special Populations, Current Topics, Overview of Antibiotics, Microbiology Laboratory Tests, and Infection Control Precautions. Those who are pressed for time and those who want to reflect on their learning will value the bulleted list entitled “Pearls and Pitfalls” that ends each chapter.

The book is not meant to be an authoritative tome on infectious diseases, and you will not find detailed footnotes to the text. Rather, each chapter has a reference list of reasonable length. Most of the chapter authors have included important citations from high-quality clinical journals, but a few have listed lengthy website URLs, which are prone to inaccuracy. Some authors have included a list of suggested additional readings. The editor is a medical doctor, and indeed the book is written for diagnosticians such as emergency physicians. The 81 contributors are mostly physicians from California, and several have graduate degrees in public health. Two pharmacists authored the 18-page “Antimicrobial Overview”, which is exceptionally well written and clinically relevant.

The layout of the book is visually appealing. The horizontal edge of each page is labelled with the chapter title and a modern coloured panel. The user-friendly index includes the generic names of drugs as well as the US trade names. Because of the time lag inherent in book publishing, there is no mention of doripenem, a new carbapenem that was approved in the United States in October 2007. Although an e-book version of this text has been created, it was not available for review.

The book has many useful colour images of infectious diseases, usually absent from pharmacy texts. Photos showing the appearance of blepharitis or chicken pox might be useful for new practitioners and those on the front lines of health care, including community pharmacists. The text also has many diagnostic tables and treatment charts; these are sometimes distracting and will probably not be as valuable for pharmacists. Lab values are presented in non-SI units, and the book lists antibiotics that are not available in Canada, such as nafcillin and amoxicillin-sulbactam. Most pharmacists will rightly look to more local treatment guidelines whenever possible. For example, this volume does not suggest extended-interval aminoglycosides as single empiric therapy for uncomplicated pyelonephritis, a reasonable recommendation that is used in some Canadian hospitals. The well-known and influential Infectious Diseases Society of America (IDSA) is referenced throughout.

As might be expected from the title, pharmacists practising in the emergency department or other urgent care settings will find this book most useful. In particular, the section on special populations will be invaluable. It contains chapters on bites, lice, fever after transplantation, and other topics that frequently arise in emergent care situations. We can hope that the sections on bioterrorism and emerging infections (such as SARS and avian influenza) will be needed only rarely, if at all, but they offer a starting point if such anxiety-charged situations do arise. New pharmacists working in outpatient infectious diseases clinics can learn from this book, especially by reading the chapters on dental and orthopedic infections.

The authors and editor set out to produce a practical, clinically oriented, systems-based overview of infectious diseases, with an emphasis on emergent diagnosis and treatment. They have succeeded.

Deana M Sabuda, BSc, BPharm, ACPR
Pharmacist, Infectious Diseases
Foothills Medical Centre
Alberta Health Services
Calgary, Alberta

Developing Clinical Practice Skills for Pharmacists

In the preface to this book, the author asks, “What is it about your patient care services as a pharmacist that makes you valuable to society?” This question forms the core of this useful new reference text, which is suitable for students, new practitioners, and experienced pharmacists.

Developing Clinical Practice Skills for Pharmacists is a well-written, well-organized, and relevant reference for most pharmacists in practice today. Readers will quickly find that much of the book simply does not apply to Canadian pharmacists (and will also quickly feel grateful for living in a country with a universal health care system!). Still, reading this material provides useful insights into how our health care system differs from that of the United States and into some of the unique strengths of the Canadian approach to health, wellness, and practitioner–patient interactions.

The great strength of this book lies in its practical orientation toward patient care. The suggestions related to gathering drug information and evidence, designing patient care plans, and developing strategies to optimize the patient–pharmacist encounter will be familiar to pharmacists, but the approach taken by the author and the practical ways in which she suggests adapting practice to improve patient care are refreshing and relevant.

The author takes pains to ensure that she is discussing generic pharmacy practice skills, and not hospital- or community-specific practices. This is particularly helpful in Chapter 8 (“Application of Clinical Reasoning”). Even experienced pharmacists who have spent many years working in interprofessional settings will find this chapter helpful.

Throughout the book, there are many useful (and some not-so-useful) features. The use of simulated patient–pharmacist dialogues as a way of illustrating key principles is helpful, offering pharmacists ideas for specific words, phrases, or approaches that they can take to enhancing patient care. A series of general assessment questions appears at the end of each chapter, but these are not as useful, since most of them are somewhat mundane reflective exercises that do not contribute meaningfully to the reader's learning.

This book is probably most applicable to senior-level pharmacy students and new practitioners or to experienced pharmacists who have not had the opportunity to work within a truly collaborative patient-centred practice setting. For these individuals, the skills-based approach emphasized by the author may help in developing a more effective pharmacy practice. Practitioners who are more experienced in patient care may find some of the material redundant or repetitive and thus might benefit from simply cherry-picking through the table of contents. For example, chapters related to the patient record and design of a patient care plan may provide fresh insights and ideas for those already accustomed to documentation and the development of care plans.

Overall, Developing Clinical Practice Skills for Pharmacists would be a useful addition to most pharmacists' libraries. It is an interesting and well-written reference, with the added dividend of providing useful patient-care strategies for novices and experts alike.

Zubin Austin, BScPhm, MBA, MISC, PhD
Leslie Dan Faculty of Pharmacy
University of Toronto
Toronto, Ontario

---

Advertisers’ Index

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Advertiser</th>
<th>Ad Page</th>
<th>Prescribing Information</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Boehringer-Ingelheim / Pradax</td>
<td>188</td>
<td>256–259</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hospira / Rocuronium</td>
<td>184</td>
<td>—</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hospira / Surface Safe</td>
<td>IBC</td>
<td>—</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The Medi-Dose Group / Corporate</td>
<td>187</td>
<td>—</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pfizer / Fragmin</td>
<td>191</td>
<td>260–264</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pharmaceutical Partners of Canada / Corporate</td>
<td>IFC</td>
<td>—</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pharmaceutical Partners of Canada / Corporate</td>
<td>OBC</td>
<td>—</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sandoz / Corporate</td>
<td>182</td>
<td>—</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>